Jewish delicacies create a smorgasbord in Let's Nosh! by Amy Wilson Sanger, the latest addition to the World Snacks series. " 'Carrot tsimmes,' calls my tummy,/ 'Let's nosh on kasha knish'/ Look how I made/ mish-mosh/ of my gefilte fish!" Colorful collages of fabrics, ribbon and more whet the appetite. “Charming, user-friendly, and stimulating.”
—Ruminator Review

Let's Nosh is one out of a series of clever ethnic food, board books for babies and toddlers, that are not your run of the mill sing song story books about animals or a day in family life. These broaden the vocabulary, and knowledge with fun stories about different types of ethnic food, with intriguing three dimensional pictures of food made from all kinds of media, blended together, that invites the young one to touch the pages and ask for repeated readings. The page with the challah, and the one beside it with the lit candles and wine goblet are beautiful. The challah looks like it is made out of sections of stuffed, tea stained cloth, braided together with poppy seeds glued on top. The candle sticks are made of white paper, the wick is black string, the glow around the flame is yellow mulberry. The wine goblet is made out of embossed silver foil pieces and inside, dark red mulberry for the wine. The pages read "I smell fresh --baked challah--it must be Friday night! I dip my pinky in the wine. We eat by candlelight." Dim Sum is my favorite from her series, and I think her most beautiful and fun to read to small children. All but the Sushi Book list the food words on the back cover with a description. You can't go wrong on any book in this series. I do wish she would come out with some more like UK, French, German and Russian cuisine books for this series.

So cute. We want our child to know that there are lots of different cultures that appreciate food. And he laughs as mommy tries to pronounce some of them. A wonderful series.

My child loves books and this one has great illustrations and a cute, rhyming story. We also have the "Yum Yum Dim Sum" book in this series, but I prefer the illustrations in this book. I like that these books can introduce children to different cultural foods. They are a nice size for little hands, easy for young children to turn the pages and very portable... easy to throw in purse or diaper bag to bring along to appointments or on outings for distraction/play. We plan on buying more of the books in this series!

This book is, like Wilson Sanger's other books, a lot of fun. The rhymes are a pleasure to read aloud, and the pictures are clever. We love to introduce the kids to a variety of foods/cultures, and this book is a great way to do just that. Because we're not Jewish, we can't vouch for the authenticity of the depictions. She does include a pronunciation guide for us Gentiles in the back - much appreciated. Both of my kids (now 5 and 2) love these books. It's fun to start out the last rhyme by saying, "Today my tummy says: let's nosh," and hearing them finish "on lots and lots of matzoh!"

I love these books! The rhyming makes the books flow nicely. My daughter loves that. They are informative and fun. The book is sturdy ( board book) so it holds up nicely to a toddler throwing it around.

Too cute.

Amy Wilson Sange creates the greatest books. My kids loved them when they were little, and now I buy them as gifts.

This line of books is so cute and so fun. The rhymes are great and it's an excellent way to expose toddlers not only to new foods but also foreign words. Makes a really great gift!
