Travels In Mauritania (Flamingo)

Synopsis

When Peter Hudson set off for Mauritania, he knew it only as a big blank space on a map of Africa. Travelling from the capital, Nouakchott, hardly more than a desert encampment, he found among the oases and ancient caravan towns a people in harmony with their harsh surroundings, and began to understand something of the emerging nation's confrontation with the world. This book describes Hudson's travels as he progressed by foot, camel and donkey. Peter Hudson's book "A Leaf in the Wind" was shortlisted for the 1988 Thomas Cook Travel Book Award.

Customer Reviews

Read as part of 'global challenge', this is a really well-written travel book. First published in 1990, the author describes his exploration of this largely unknown country - from his arrival in the capital, Nouakchott, with the encroaching sand; to the Moorish peoples of the desert. He visits a ruined city, meets fishermen who fish with the dolphins, and becomes aware of the tensions between black and white Mauritians. As another reviewer observes, there isn't a lot of 'action', but Peter Hudson's descriptions of these remote towns and their inhabitants are vividly depicted. Contains a few line drawings and b/w photos.

fast shipping, OK Sturdy, well balanced, great value a present , Very well.
